

LODGINGS FOR POOR WOMEN.

Where Some of the Homeless and Destitute Pass Their Nights.

They Sit in a Dark Shelter and Sleep in a Shed.

New York is sadly in need of cheap, decent lodgings for destitute women. So far as can be learned the station-houses offer the most convenient and attractive accommodations that the impoverished sisterhood can find. The streets, it is true, are as hard as the charity benches in city churches, but the place is always warm, well ventilated and brightly lighted.

If there is a single waiting-room, refuge or dormitory for homeless and helpless women in the whole city out side of the Police Department to compare with the five-cent lodgings for men and boys in the old Scotch Presbyterian Church, "The Evening World" is not aware of its location. There the accommodations are almost inviting.

"When I am obliged to remain in the store all night, as I have been several times this month, I sleep on one of these cots and sleep well," remarked one of R. H. Macy's heads of department the day the parish house was opened to the vagrant poor.

These cots are arranged in aisles, separated only by a chair, owing to the insufficiency of space, but the atmosphere is kept pure by close attention to ventilation. The entire building, dormitories, halls and dining-rooms, is kept at a constant heat, and at all times there is the luxury of brilliant light.

There are 200 cots. Every morning every bed is aired and made up with fresh linen—not one sheet, but a pair, and a clean and pillow slip. This laundry work is done by contract, as a representative of Mr. Straus explained. "It is done like clock work and at very slight expense."

When this project was conceived women and girls were nominated for its benefits. For moral reasons the original plan could not be carried out with the facilities at hand. To make the best use of the church house and funds the women were excluded from the privilege of a cheap, clean lodging-house, and the disappointment is known to have been great.

One of the best known lodging-houses for women in the city is on the west side. An average of sixty weeks of womanhood go there for shelter every night. That they do not go straight to destruction when they come out is no fault of surrounding influences.

One Saturday afternoon, about a fortnight ago, there were between twenty and thirty "guests" in the place called by courteous a sitting room. The forlorn creatures were in the dark, huddled about an old ghost of a stove, silent, one-begone and patient in the lowliness of self-esteem imposed by charity. The sun's light made some of the old gray heads shine like silver.

Any thought of halcyon or heavenly reliance that struggled into form was quickly dispelled by the wretched conditions and abjection of the women who were there. Some had been in the same struggle of despair since a cruel God only knew the sorrow of their lives. The bedroom to which these creatures in the dark were awaiting admission was cold and dreary and repulsive.

The atmosphere was vitiated to a degree that was unbearable, chilled and all as it was. The apartment occupied a shed that formed a connecting link between two buildings. There were windows in it. Light came from the shed. The beds that completely filled the room were dirty, and offensive alike to the eyes and the senses.

It is true that the thirty occupants did not have to pay, but then there were the 200 cots in the Scotch Presbyterian

Parish House, white, sweet-smelling and cozy as nursery cribs, for a night or night, and with a breakfast of cold coffee and fresh bread thrown in. The contrast reflects but little credit upon the women who make the shelter.

In another part of the building there were beds for twenty more. The conditions surrounding them were a little better. The rooms had been ventilated, the air was warm from the lower floor, but the beds looked as though they had been out and soiled their clothes.

Even a night's rest in this dreary, dismal place, the inmate does some sort of domestic labor. She is fed like a dog on human waste, and sometimes a day's work with brown water and victims that only consuming hunger could tolerate.

Little sympathy is wasted upon these women, generally known as station hoppers. This winter, however, their numbers have been increased by good women who have the horrible fate of being the wives of human brutes, and forced to flee from their husbands' fury at all hours of the night. They go to the shelter, sometimes alone and sometimes with a baby or little child in arms.

Miss Susan M. Osborne, whose life work is the amelioration of the working-woman's condition, superintends "The Home," a temporary residence for young women out of employment. The Home is at 113 West Fourteenth street, and during the past two months half a million copies of the following circular have been mailed from it:

FREE TO HOMELESS WOMEN. NO QUESTIONS ASKED.

Homeless, friendless, cold and hungry? Such is the condition of the three thousand women who are in the city of New York. Will you help us to feed them? If so, on receipt of postal card, please send us your name and address, and we will call for you and send you to the Home.

Postal card may be addressed to: MISS SUSAN M. OSBORNE, 113 West Fourteenth street.

Speaking of the unhappy condition of the class for whom she is working, Miss Osborne said:

"Things are so very bad just now that we have numerous governesses, seamstresses, companions and domestics who will willingly accept positions in respectable families for board and lodging. There are scores of capable houseworkers who are glad to accept 30 cents with their meals in return for a day's work."

"They wash, iron, clean windows and woodwork, sweep, sweep, mind children, wait on table, pick over mattresses. In fact, do anything to get a living. It would be idle to try to estimate the number or distress of the unemployed women and girls about New York just now."

"They deserve the help that wives in comfortable homes could give them. Miss Osborne will be pleased to communicate with any fortunate woman who wishes to aid an unfortunate sister."

SAYS SHE WAS SWINDLED.

Mrs. Carter Suing for Money Invested in a Car-Heating Company.

Mrs. Josephine L. Carter, who invested $1,000 in the stock of the McLeod Pneumatic Car-Heater and Cooler Company, has brought a suit in the Court of Common Pleas to recover this money, alleging that she was induced to put her money into the concern by fraudulent representations as to the patents alleged to be controlled by the company and the extent to which the device had been introduced on railroads.

She claims that the whole scheme was a gigantic swindle, and that she and hundreds of others were gulled by the glowing prospectuses which were issued. The defendants are John S. McLeod and Henry Hartley, who were trustees to collect subscriptions to the stock. It is alleged that no account of the money received has ever been made by the trustees, that nothing has ever been done by the company, and that it controls no patents.

The case is now on the calendar and will probably come up for trial in a week or two. It will be made a test case, and all the original subscribers to stock in the company are interested in it. The defense is a general denial of the charges made by Mrs. Carter.
